My Trinity Story – Amy Waters (nee Lang)

When I arrived at Trinity in 2007 to start my first teaching role, I was thrust into a brand-new world: a world of timetables, photocopying, bells, new learning but most of all friendly faces. Alf DiMauro was the first one to introduce himself and ask me how I was doing, and if I needed anything; he was happy to help. Since then, we have farewelled and welcomed a plethora of staff, worked with three principals, seen new buildings erected and cried lots of tears of sadness and joy! The one true consistent though is that... you never go hungry at Trinity College.

The spirit of Trinity is always present. Whether that be the hard work and dedication of our students, the proud teachers who support them, the sense of community and belonging or the continued encouragement.

If it wasn't for Trinity, my life may have taken a very different path.

I have made lifelong friends.

I met my now husband, Daniel Waters.

I connected with our Indigenous Program, opening myself up to this amazing culture and community of elders and students.

And

I have grown emotionally, spiritually and with a great deal of knowledge.

Trinity College is a family who has come a long way in their 40 years and it doesn't look like it's slowing down anytime soon.
